Detailed characteristics of the vacancy:

Special Teaching, Research or Outreach program:

Hiring a Senior Visiting Professor will be a strategic step to consolidate the internationalization axis and deepen the comparative analysis of public policies at PGPP/UFABC. The professor will contribute to integrated teaching, research, and extension activities, with a focus on the transnational dimensions of educational policies, the dynamics of multilateral cooperation, and the institutional transformation processes of educational systems. Planned activities include offering and improving courses at the master's and doctoral levels, with emphasis on the comparative analysis of public policies, international cooperation, political regimes, and advanced theoretical-methodological approaches to the policy process. The professor will also collaborate in student supervision, promote academic seminars, help establish a scientific journal for the program, and develop inter-institutional projects with international research networks both in the region and globally. By joining already-established research groups, the professor will help enhance the program's interdisciplinary scientific output, expand its international presence, and strengthen the ties between the university, the state, and society. This position is aligned with UFABC's institutional objectives and reinforces PGPP's role as a regional reference in critical training and knowledge production in public policy.
